CHAMPAGNE

Champagne is the wine of celebration, commiseration, racecourse successes, christenings, weddings and seductions. In spite of recent price increases, it still makes the perfect aperitif or after-dinner refresher. There are many houses available, all of which make different styles and wines. Most Champagne is blended from Pinot Noir and Chardonnay grapes but there are some exceptions; made only from Chardonnay, these are usually listed as blancs de blancs. Rose Champagnes are enjoying a revival at the moment and their pretty colour always enhances a party or celebration.

SPARKLING WINES

These should not be thought of as cheap alternatives to Champagne. They are often as well made and produced by the same method as Champagne, they are merely different wines in different styles.

ENGLISH SPARKLING WINES

Produced locally in Dorset, English Oak Vineyard at Lytchett Matravers and D'Uberville Vineyard on the old part of Poundbury Farm Dorchester both wines are made from a blend of the classic Chardonnay, Pinot Meunier and Pinot Noir grapes. Great wines, why not try some for that perfect celebration.

CLARET

We feel justly proud of our Claret list, which has been built up over many years. Because it is now fairly lengthy, we have divided it into communes. Claret is principally from two main areas. On the left bank of the Garonne is the main area for wines made mostly from Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc. This is the Medoc. On the right bank of the Dordogne are St Emilion and Pomerol. Here the main grape is the Merlot, especially in Pomerol. In St Emilion it shares the honours with the Cabernet Franc. These wines are often softer and more likely to be ready for early drinking than the more austere wines of the Medoc.

The surrounding area, Bordeaux, Blaye, Cote de Francs, Fronsac, Cote de Castillon

Many good little wines can be found in these areas.,

Medoc

A strange mix of Chateaux make up this group, from really top properties, such as Ch La Lagune, through up-and-coming Chateaux like Caronne Ste Gemme. They have in common only that they do not fit geographically into the basic village communes of the rest of Medoc.

Margaux

At the Southern end of the Medoc is Margaux, with its magnificent eponymous Chateau, and many other imposing properties. The general summation on the style of the wines of the commune is that they are soft and feminine.

St Estephe

St Estephe has always had the reputation of being the commune whose wines take longest to mature. This is often true of certain Chateau, Montrose and Cos d'Estournel, for example, but is not always the case.

Pauillac

The most serious wine-growing area of Bordeaux, which includes three of the five first growths: Latour, Lafite and Mouton Rothschild. Pauillac is always Inky-purple in youth and full of the smell and taste of Blackcurrants. when it matures, the smell is further enhanced by cigar box overtones. Magnificent wines.

Pomerol

Properties in Pomerol in general produce very small quantities of wine. Most Chateaux have over 75% planted with Merlot; some, like Petrus, plant over 90%. This makes for round, voluptuous wines with appeal to the English palate

Graves Pessac Leognan

The region of Graves takes its name from the gravel soil which is prevalent there. This soil imparts a dry, earthy character to the wines. This sounds less than a recommendation, but the wines mellow rapidly with age and become soft and delicious with just a hint of their youthful earthiness.

DRY WHITE BORDEAUX

White Bordeaux is undergoing a renaissance, mainly because winemakers are now using cold temperature fermentation and new oak for ageing. The wines are made of a blend, different at each property, of Sauvignon and Semillon. They range from the ultra dry to the luscious, yet dry Ygrec, the dry white wine of Ch Yquem.

BEAUJOLAIS

The light, delicious, fruity wines from the beautiful Beaujolais hills are perfect summer drinking wines. They have an abundance of marvellous raspberry-like Gamay fruit and are as good chilled, as the French drink them, as they are at room temperature.

MACON and the COTE CHALONNAISE

Lying between Beaujolais and Burgundy proper are the two regions of the Maconnais and Chalonnaise. Both produce red wines from the Pinot Noir grape, and White, from the Chardonnay, as in the main area of Burgundy. No-one would pretend that they have the quality of the great wines from further north, but in view of the prices being charged there, it is necessary to look elsewhere for supplies of Burgundian wine. The Rully is particularly recommended; it has depth and richness well beyond its appellation.

RED BURGUNDY

Cote de Beaune

The Southern end of the Cote d'Or is renowned for its great white-wines-the greatest dry white wines of the world. The reds range from the delicate, fruity Savigny, through the powerful Auxey Duresses to the classy Corton, Pommard and Volnay. With Burgundy, it is the grower and the vintage which are all important, not the village name. Jadot is a top rank grower, and Ampeau is among the top negociants. We have tried to include wines from top, mature vintages as well as younger, light, fruity wines.

This is the home of top red Burgundy; stronger, richer and more robust than the wines of the Cote de Beaune. Names like Chambertin, Clos Vougeot and Nuits St Georges are now expensive but there are other enjoyable, affordable wines.

WHITE BURGUNDY

Macon and the Cote de Chalonnaise

The soaring price of Chardonnay wines in the Cote d`Or has led to the discovery of well made, smaller wines in the Maconnais and the Chalonnaise. Some of the names may be unfamiliar but the wines are well-made and offer good value for money

Cote d`Or

Most great white Burgundy comes from the Cote de Beaune from the villages of Meursault, Chassagne Montrachet and Puligny Montrachet. Behind the great villages lie less well-known hamlets like St Aubin. The wine from these villages is less intense and concentrated but it is less expensive.

CHABLIS

Chablis is not White Burgundy, although it is made from the same grape variety, the Chardonnay. The area of production lies almost midway between Paris and Burgundy proper. The soil is entirely different and the wines should have more steel and freshness than wines from the Cote d'Or. Nevertheless some producers are attempting to make their wines taste like Puligny Montrachet by using lots of new oak. This is not always a success, as the oak can mask the flavour of the Chardonnay grape. There are many different opinions in Chablis as to how much oak should be used, if at all.

RHONE

The red wines from the Rhone valley are at last receiving the attention which they have so long deserved. The region can be considered as two separate areas, the North, which produces long-lived red wines from the Syrah grape, such as Hermitage, and Cote Rotie, , and to the South, which consists of a confusing and disparate set of appellations. The most widely planted grape is the Grenache but many producers are now using a lot of Syrah. However, this is an oversimplification; there are thirteen permitted grape varieties in Chateauneuf du Pape! All the wines benefit from ageing but for economic reasons many are either drunk too young or are vinified so as to drink earlier.

Languedoc White

The white wines of the Rhone have long been overlooked. This is mainly because the winemaking was often so primitive that the delicacy of the Rousanne and Marsanne grapes was totally destroyed, leaving an early-oxidising, undistinguished wine. This situation has changed markedly over the last few years. In the very north of the region, two neighbouring appellations produce stunning wines from the seldom planted, difficult to grow Viognier grape.

LOIRE

White

The Loire is a long river with vineyards dotted down its entire length. Three different grape varieties are used. The Muscadet or Melon de Bourgogne makes its eponymous wine round Nantes at the South of the river. This is often thought of as the wine to have with shellfish. Some might prefer White Burgundy. Next along the river come Vouvray and Savennieres. Here the Chenin Blanc grape is used. The river then bends and runs South-North instead of West-East, producing some of the most popular wines of France. Made from the Sauvignon Blanc grape, they are crisp, dry and steely and have caught the imagination of the wine buying public.

Red

On the upper Loire, at Chinon and Bourgeuil, light red wines are made from the Cabernet Franc grape. Despite the use of this grape, the wines are more reminiscent of Beaujolais than St Emilion.

ALSACE

Alsace is one of the prettiest, the most gastronomically rewarding and the least-known wine-producing areas in France. Lying on the lower slopes of the Vosges mountains, the vineyards attract a lot of sun and very little rain. Alsace has changed hands from France to Germany three times in the last 125 years. This has made for a winemaking and indeed food culture somewhat different from the rest of France. In Alsace the wines are named after the grape varieties and not the villages from which the wines come. The simplest of these is the Sylvaner, a perfect picnic wine. Next comes the Muscat, with its light, elegant floweriness. This makes a very good aperitif. Then the noble grapes: Gewurztraminer, spicy and perfumed; Tokay, more delicate, yet with great depth; and Riesling, which the Alsatians consider the king of grapes. The situation is further complicated by the fact that the Alsace vigneron, like their cousins and rivals in Germany, make richer wines which are designated with different names by each house, so that the relative lushness of, say Paul Blanck is about equal to Trimbach's Riesling. Finally come the late harvest wines, Vendange Tardive and the rare Selection de Grains Nobles. These are made from grapes attacked by Pourriture Noble, as in Sauternes. In Alsace, however, they are never `sweet` as they are in Bordeaux, but intense and rich. It is a pity that these wines are so difficult to sell as they are really delicious- why not try some?

GERMANY
HOCK and MOSEL

The English gave the name Hock to German Rhine wines in the 19th century, when Queen Victoria popularised the wines of Hochem. The wines range from light and dry to rich and sweet; they are refined and long flavoured. The King of the grape varieties is the Riesling, which only ripens in the finest sites in good years.

The Mosel valley is one of the most northerly vineyard areas in Europe. The river Mosel snakes its way from Luxembourg to meet the Rhine at Koblenz. The banks are steep cliffs, like slopes of pure slate. This soil gives their wines unique flavour. They are flinty, dry to medium dry, low in alcohol and above all exceptionally grapey with a refreshing aftertaste.

A renaissance is taking place in Italian winemaking. Serious wines, both Red and White are being made. Because they contain foreign grape varieties, many have to be designated 'Vino da Tavola'. Some of the most impressive wines are coming from Tuscany and Umbria, where Chardonnay is now planted quite widely and new methods of vinification are being employed. in 25ml measures and multiples of 25ml*

*Whilst every effort is made to keep current vintages up to date on the wine list, occasionally some vintages may differ to those on offer. If you are unhappy with any new vintage or grower offered we will be happy to change the wine for you.
It is our policy to decant any wine that we feel will benefit you and the wine from decanting.*
